

Editorial

Reimagining India's Global Role through Heritage and Contemporary Realities

In an era marked by geopolitical tensions, social fragmentation, and environmental crises, India's civilizational ethos offers a compelling framework for global engagement. The idea of India as a Vishwaguru, a moral and cultural guide, extends beyond symbolism and reflects a pragmatic synthesis of spirituality, diplomacy, and sustainable development. Rooted in values such as Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam, India's approach emphasizes cooperation, inclusivity, and ethical leadership.

At the same time, contemporary realities demand a balanced strategy. India's relations with nations like Sri Lanka illustrate how historical cultural ties can coexist with strategic and economic cooperation despite periodic challenges. Similarly, the evolving dynamics with China highlight the complexities of competition and cooperation in a shifting global order.

Domestically and regionally, issues of minority rights and social cohesion underscore the importance of inclusive governance and human dignity. Social fragmentation, which refers to the division of society into disconnected groups, can weaken unity and public trust if not addressed effectively. Furthermore, environmental crises such as climate change and biodiversity loss demand sustainable policy responses.

India's future as a global leader lies not merely in power projection, but in harmonizing its heritage with modern policy, ensuring peace, sustainability, and human dignity worldwide.